

be published in dialogue magazine

Call for submissions on our next theme:

Parents and private schools

If you have students, you've got parents. How significant is the parent-school relationship in the world of private and independent education? What impact does/will it have on your school's policies and operations (for good or ill); on the roles of heads, administrators, teachers and staff; on students?

Parents are your partners ... patrons ... customers ... employers? Which describes the view held at your school? By the head? By teachers? By students?

What does an ideal parent-private school relationship look like? Are parents and schools equals in the relationship? Should they be? In your experience, what's been the best way to build and maintain good relationships with parents? Accountability, boundaries, communication, diplomacy...?

Millennial parents and students—what are they all about? Who's on the frontline interacting with them, and how well are they doing? What's next on the horizon?

Does your school ever tell a parent: "No means no"? Can a school afford to?

Raise your voice on this theme: Share your views on what was, what is or what should be the relationship between parents and private/independent schools.

For more information and future themes, please visit www.dialogueonline.ca

Article proposal deadline:

April 30, 2008

Publication date:

Spring 2009

To be considered:

Send a brief summary of your proposed article (no more than one typewritten page) along with your name, current position, daytime telephone number, e-mail address and short bio with your qualifications.

Send to: editor@dialogueonline.ca

contribute to dialogue

Send an article to Creativity & Imagination AfterWords

Submit an article for our next issue on "Parents and private schools"

Write a book review

Join the editorial advisory board